

On March 1, 1926 Con was thirty-six years old and was asked by the power company to maintain a wood stove pipeline as a patrolman for the Murdock electric plant eight miles north of Heber City, Utah. The family lived at Hailstone a mile from the plant. A three room lumber home, without water, was provided for them. Con walked six miles round trip every day and kept the holes in the pipeline repaired. The work was hard but he could return home each evening.

On June 16, 1927 Con was transferred to the Olmstead power plant and was assigned to reside at Nunn's Station in Provo Canyon, seven miles northeast of Olmstead. An old tarpaper lumber house was provided for him but within five years new modern cottages were erected for the employees. There was no school in the canyon so Lila took the girls to live in town during the school term. When school was out the family joined their husband and father at Nunn's.

Some of the employees, with their families, who lived at Nunn's during the years Con was with the utility company included Johnny Carter, widower; Dick Ivy, widower; Morris Gordon, his wife Mae and infant son; Bert and Mae Schoell with their two sons and a daughter and "Whitey" Peay, his wife and family.

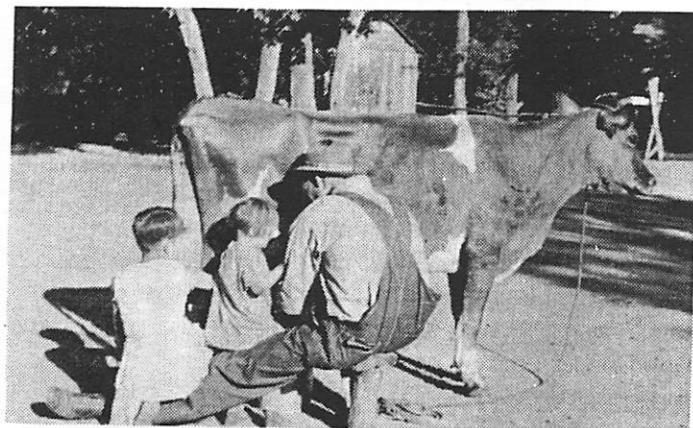

While living at Nunn's the utility company sponsored training in safety measures. Con received several certificates for his achievements in first aid.
